A FINAL tour of the shops where the most fascinating accessories imaginable for the summer wardrobe are on display preceded a general exodus to suburban homes, and by the end of next week nearly every one who is fortunate enough to possess a country place will have opened it; then begins the usual suburban season with polo, golf and tennis aplenty, followed by tea and very informal dances at the country clubs.

For shopping excursions the severely tailored two-piece suit holds first favor, and many smart models can be observed of a busy morning. Mrs. A. J. Antelo Devereux looks particularly well in a trottet of this type. The material is a Scotch plaid, a black-and-white checked ground being crossed by a red stripe. The skirt is circular, and has a seam over each hip, and is topped by a pea jacket devoid of trimming and slashed at each side. The note of simplicity is carried out by the wide roll collar of white linen, and the large black sailor hat trimmed at the right side with two flat quills.

Mrs. Edwin N. Benson, Jr., wears a modish walking suit of navy blue serge. The skirt is given fullness by the inset of several pleats at each side, and the jacket, with its circular flare, is given a military aspect by the use of gold braid, which forms the collar, and round metal buttons, two of which flash off the belt at the back. The young matron's hat is of black hemp, with a transparent brim, and has two spear-shaped ornaments as its sole trimming.

One of Philadelphia's most attractive matrons, Mrs. Andrew Whelan, wears an extremely

The Misses Butler entertained at their residence, 2935 Frankford avenue, this week. Within a few weeks they will leave for a visit to relatives in Brooklyn.

A smart trottet of dark blue serge. The skirt is made with an overskirt draped in apron effect at the front, and sloping away to the belt, where it is finished off by two braided tabs. The short bolero-like jacket is also braided, and has a rolling collar of black silk. Over this is thrown an Angora muffler in tan color. Mrs. Wheeler's hat is a good-looking, wide-brimmed model of black straw, trimmed with two small wings at either side.

A smart one-piece frock of navy blue taffeta is being worn by Miss Edwina Elkins Bruner. The skirt, which is quite full in the prevailing mode, is shirred at the waist line and again lower down, where a second belt of the taffeta encircles the hips. The waist is in jumper effect, with sleeves of blue chiffon and a perfectly plain flat collar of white satin. Miss Bruner's hat is a fetching model of blue straw, to match the tone of her frock, and is trimmed with dark blue and brilliant orange flowers and wheat.

A bright Norfolk suit in a becoming shade of green is worn by Miss Kitty Brinton. Her hat is of straw, in a cafe au lait shade, faced with satin, and has two curled quills twisted flat on the crown. On cool days Miss Brinton wears a good-looking neckpiece of white fox. Miss Eulalie Wilcox is wearing for warm days a becoming frock of navy blue wide-striped taffeta. The skirt is quite voluminous, the fullness being held in plaits over the hips. A hand-made collar of white and a wide-brimmed hat of dark blue straw complete the costume.

ROSE TREE RACES

Preparations for Annual Affair and Number of Parking Spaces Predict Successful Affair.

Parking spaces for the Rose Tree Fox Hunting Club's spring race meet, one of the best known social events of the spring season, have been coming in rapidly, and to judge from all appearances society will turn out in full force next Saturday afternoon. The races will start at 2:15 o'clock, and the program includes six events, several of which are almost as old as the club and as well known. Notably among them is the first event, the race for farmers' workhorses and ridden only by bona fide farmers of Delaware, Chester and Montgomery Counties. The other one is the famous cross-country race, which has been run over the club's picturesque course since 1869.

This race is one of the most popular events in the fox hunting circles, and a win is very highly prized. The pick of local hunters and steeplechasers always turns out for this event and there are usually quite a few out-of-town entries to contest with the local talent for the prize. The race is run over a post and rail course extending out and beyond the club's grounds over the hills and dales of the surrounding country and in constant view of the spectators. It is a splendid race from the on-lookers' point of view, as the club is situated upon a hill and the riders are seen often like tiny red-coated mannikins in the distance, appearing and disappearing behind the natural swells of the land. The jumps on this course are made to counteract as nearly as possible the natural barriers which would be encountered in an actual hunt.

The sporting element of society will come for the race, and although the New York delegation might be somewhat smaller than usual, owing to the Meadowbrook Club race meet at Long Island, it is expected that there will be many from that city who have been in the habit of making this trip each year. Society folk from Washington, Baltimore and other surrounding cities will also be present.

Among those who have already engaged parking spaces are Mr. Dayton Voorhees, Mr. S. Grey Dayton, Mr. Daniel B. Wentz, Mrs. R. C. James, Mr. Benjamin T. Britt, Mrs. H. H. Battles, Mr. Samuel D. Riddle, Mr. Harry Wain Harrison, Mrs. Frederick H. Shelton, Mr. Morris R. Stroud, Mrs. Charles S. Schoen, Dr. Charles Jack, Mr. Robert W. Downing, Mr. Charles Leddom, Mr. Carl Feldman, Mrs. Walter L. Jofford, Mr. George Lippincott, Mr. John J. Campbell and Mr. J. Smylie Herkness.

The stewards of the races are Mr. Samuel D. Riddle, Mr. Charles E. Mather, Mr. A. J. A. Devereux, General Edward DeV. Morrill, Mr. Welsh Strawbridge and Mr. Edward B. Smith. The judges are Mr. John H. Hawkins, Mr. Edward P. Beale and Mr. R. Penn Smith. Clerk of course, Dr. Charles A. Dohan; clerk of scales, Mr. Richard C. Murtagh; paddock judge, Mr. Dan Rice; starter, Mr. Horace G. Twaddell; timers, Mr. Leander W. Riddle and Mr. W. Plunkett Stewart; patrol judges, Mr. Edward B. Chase, Mr. B. Watkins and Mr. W. Foster Reeve, 3d.
